

Announcing a New Series

RLI Policy Impacts – informing policy, improving society

We are now accepting proposals for short, policy-oriented books that are targeted at the national and international policy audience.

This new series aims to bridge the divide between the academic community and policy-makers: providing academics with a format and channel for policy-relevant research and ensuring that practitioners are informed about the best research that is available to them. RLI Policy Impacts will provide a forum for knowledge exchange, a bank of information and ideas and recommendations for implementation to improve the society we live in.

Titles for the series will:

- be between 25 thousand and 45 thousand words long;
- satisfy a rigorous peer review process;
- relay research findings that are relevant to the policy audience;
- include an executive summary and recommendations for implementation;
- be prepared to the highest editorial standards with a full copy-editing, typesetting and proofreading service
- be marketed to a global policy and academic audience
- be published in hardback, paperback and E-Book format simultaneously

Suggested topics for inclusion are

- | | |
|---------------------------------|------------------------------|
| • economics of education | • economics of health |
| • (un)employment | • migration |
| • regional development | • social exclusion |
| • EU economic policy | • trade policy |
| • wellbeing | • infrastructure |
| • energy | • environment |

The Series builds on RLI's experience of working with leading think tanks to publish policy-relevant content. In collaboration with you, the author or editor, we will help to target the relevant policy audience for your research and to facilitate the impact agenda of your work.

For further information, please contact Alison Howson, Publisher for Economics, at ahowson@rowman.com